Yankees Re-occupy Atlanta

After three great years in central Texas, on 10 June we sold our house, packed the cars, and headed East to start a new adventure in Atlanta. We found a superb home, community, church and school system in Peachtree City just south of the airport. It is a planned community set on forested hills laced with 80 miles of paths that are ideal for running, biking and walks. Lianne and Rachel are so comfortable in their metropolitan upper-middle class "natural" environment that VJ is very seriously concerned that they will not accompany him the next time he gets transferred.

Lianne goes "Home" (Health) for the Holidays

After a three year sojourn in the field of school nursing, Lianne has returned to a form of nursing she greatly enjoys, home health care. At the end of November, she resigned from a very stressful and time intensive job running an internal medicine practice for two local doctors and signed on with the Visiting Nurse Health System. She loves the independence, flexibility, and professional satisfaction that comes with the new job. As the family's commander-in-chief of automotive maintenance, VJ fears the return of the "piggy car" (working out of your car tends to make it a mess...)

"Black" day for Local "Tween"

After two years of hard work and great exercise, Rachel earned her First Degree Black Belt in the Doo Hap Moo Sol discipline of Hapkido.

Where's the Beach Part II

VJ returned to the Persian Gulf in August to help finish a job he and 200 thousand of his closest uniformed friends didn't finish twelve years ago. Regrettably, this trip was a low-testosterone affair. As a mid-level galley slave in the bowels of the U.S. Army Central Command headquarters in Kuwait, paper cuts and bad food were the greatest dangers VJ faced and he only killed trees and electronics while deployed. He returned in early December (hence the "late again" edition). Expect a return engagement in 2004.

Midlife crisis declared!

Its official! After turning 39 (or as we prefer to describe it, his late 30s,) VJ has officially declared an early start to his mid-life crisis. Lianne reports that he has suddenly taken an interest in healthy eating, is taking vitamins, tried to buy a sports car, and even experimented with a mustache (insert gasps of horror from the females of the family)!

Evil Cat Leads Insurgents

Highly placed sources who wish to remain nameless tell us that the infamous Osama Bin Boo Boo is leading an insurgent cell in the Fallujah area. He states the recent spate of roadside CPBs, cat pee bombings, are what convinced local American commanders that the Evil One remains alive and well.

Limited Too Announces Takeover

The Limited Too announced today that it had acquired Rachel A. Tedesco. Ltd for an unspecified discount on future purchases. Under the terms of the agreement, Rachel must only dress in Limited Too apparel and must spread the gospel throughout Booth Middle School. In her only public comment, Rachel stated, "Middle School is all about fashion."

Other News

- We regret to report that our beloved calico cat Gremlyn passed away on 20 December. She was our first "child" and the only good cat in the household.
- Our brief experiment with truck ownership has come to an end. To VJ's delight a silver Infiniti FX35 recently joined the family.
